About This Game

In a city there was a series of mysterious fires. Many people was missing. Firefighters who were at those facilities, noticed strange things. They claimed to have seen other people in a reflection of mirrors. No bodies were found.
You are fire inspector, who at end of a day must check the last object to determine a cause of a fire. The object is a house of mirrors. But all is not as easy as it seems at first glance. Mirrors hide horror of flames.

"Flame of Mirrors" is an indie horror from a lone developer.
Player has to walk through the dark tangled corridors, illuminating his path with the dim radio of walkie-talkie. Moving through levels will occur through mirrors, mirrors are portals.

Beware of the victims of flame! If it becomes scary, close your eyes.

You walk painfully slowly down nearly identical smoky & dark corridors, find a mirror & hold LMB to blink for 3 or 4 seconds (which so far as I remember the game doesn't tell you to do) and some jump scare nonsense happens & then you do it again at every other mirror.
Some don't do anything, some open corridors behind you that have more mirrors in them, some lead to a cutscene that kills you & then you respawn & have to do a number of mirrors again in order to then not Blink in the mirror that kills you in some tortuous trial & error 'gameplay', there didn't seem to be a way to tell which mirrors were going to kill you beforehand & there seemed to be no ability to run once you realised your mistake you had to just redo the mirrors & then leave; after the first such \u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665\u2665 I hoped it didn't return as a mechanic & then it did it again with the same result, trapped in a cutscene that ends with a screen that tells me 'You have burned alive' & my only reaction was "Good." & then I returned it.
